Transportation Committee

Here's a summary actions taken in response to accidents involving crude oil and other hazardous materials

RAILROADS:

Warren Buffet (BNSF) requested bids for 5000 rail tank cars that would be built to his railroads spec.

An agreement between the U.S. Transportation Department and the Association of American railroads was reached. The railroads would slow down trains from 50 to 40 miles per hour through major cities, they would inspect the tracks more frequently, and the railroads would bolster emergency response planning along routes that carry trains hauling up to three million gallons of crude.

THE FEDS:

The FRA issued an emergency order addressing unattended trains, train securement, the use of locks, communication between train crews and dispatchers, and daily safety briefings for railroad employees.

They are investigating how shippers and carriers are classifying crude oil and what actions they are taking to understand the characters of the material. This consisted of unannounced spot inspections primarily targeting shipments from the Bakken region.

The Emergency Order of 2/25/2014 states that those who offer crude oil for transportation by rail must ensure that the product is properly tested and classified in accordance with federal safety regulations. The Emergency Order also requires that all Class III crude oil shipments be designated as Packing Group I or II
